

What follows is an overview of the different `documentclass` article types. The aim of this was to see what they look like by default (meaning before changing margins and font sizes etc.). Each document contains

\title{Title}
\author{A.~U. Thor}

\usepackage{abstract}
\usepackage{natbib}

\begin{document}

\maketitle

\begin{abstract}
An abstract is a short description of the main points of a piece of work
\end{abstract}

\section{Introduction}

According to \citet{lipsum}: ``Lorem ipsum dolor sit amet, consectetur adipiscing elit, sed do

\bibliographystyle{unsrtnat}
\bibliography{refs}

\end{document}

the only thing that is different is the `documentclass`. This is not exhaustive as multiple publishers have their own. The ones considered are listed alphabetically below. NB `revtex` is not included because it clashes with the `abstract` package
